Since Prime Minister Attlee arrived in Washington on December 1, six meetings between the President and Mr. Attlee have been held. Among those who participated as advisers to the President were the Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, the Secretary of Defense General George C. Marshall, the Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman, the Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Mr. W. Howard Harriman, the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board W. Stuart Symington, and Ambassador-designate Walter E. Clifford. Mr. Attlee's advisers included the British Ambassador, Sir Oliver S. Freake, Field Marshal Sir William Slim, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, Marshal of the Royal Air Force Lord Tedder, Sir Roger Haldane and Mr. H. H. Stock of the Foreign Office and Sir Edwin Flawn, Chief of the Economic Planning Staff.

At the conclusion of their conferences, the President and the Prime Minister issued the following joint statement:

We have reviewed together the outstanding problems facing our two countries in international affairs. The objectives of our two nations in foreign policy are the same: to maintain world peace and respect for the rights and interests of all peoples; to promote strength and confidence among the freedom-loving countries of the world; to eliminate the causes of fear, war and discontent; and to advance the democratic way of life.

We first reviewed the changing aspect of world affairs arising from the massive intervention of Chinese communists in Korea. We have discussed the problems of the Far East and the situation as it now proceeds itself in Europe. We have surveyed the economic problems and the defense progress of our respective countries, and particularly the existing and threatened shortages of raw materials. We have considered the arrangements for the defense of the Atlantic community, and our future course in the United Nations.

The unity of objectives of our two countries underlay all the discussions. There is no difference between us as to the nature of the threat which our countries face or the basic policies which must be pursued to overcome it. We recognize, that many of the problems which we have discussed can only be decided through the procedures of the United Nations or the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The peoples of the United States and the United Kingdom will act together with resolution and unity to meet the challenge to peace which recent events have made clear to all.

The situation in Korea is one of great gravity and far-reaching consequences. By the end of October, the forces of the United Nations had all but completed the mission set for them by the United Nations "to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area." A free and unified Korea - the objective which the United Nations has long sought - was well on the way to being realized. At that point Chinese communist forces entered Korea in large numbers, and on November 27 launched a large-scale attack on the United Nations troops. The United Nations forces have the advantage of superior air power and naval support, but on the ground they are confronted by a heavy numerical superiority.

The United Nations forces were sent into Korea on the authority and at the recommendation of the United Nations. The United Nations has not changed the mission which it has entrusted to them and the forces of our two countries will continue to discharge their responsibilities.

We were in complete agreement that there can be no thought of appeasement or of rewarding aggression, whether in the Far East or elsewhere. Lasting peace and the future of the United Nations as an instrument for world peace depend upon strong support for resistance against aggression.

For our part we are ready, as we have always been, to seek an end to the hostilities by means of negotiation. The same principles of international conduct should be applied to this situation as are applied, in accordance with our obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, to any threat to world peace. Every effort must be made to achieve the purposes of the United Nations in form by peaceful means and to find a solution of the Korean problem on the basis of a free and independent Korea. We are confident that the great majority of the United Nations takes the same view. If the Chinese on their side display any evidence of a similar attitude, we are hopeful that the cause of peace can be upheld. If they do not, then it will be for the members of the world, acting through the United Nations, to decide how the principles of the Charter can best be administered. For our part, we declare in advance our firm resolve to uphold them.

We considered her questions regarding China which we already before the United Nations. On the question of the Chinese seat in the United Nations, the two governments differ. The United States has recognized the Central People’s Government and considers that its representatives should occupy China’s seat in the United Nations.
The United States has opposed and continues to oppose the seating of the Chinese communist representatives in the United Nations. We have discussed our difference of view on this point and are determined to prevent it from interfering with our united effort in support of our common objectives.

On the question of Taiwan, we have noted that both Chinese claimants have emphasized the validity of the Cairo Declaration and have expressed readiness to have the matter considered by the United Nations. We agree that the issues should be settled by peaceful means and in such a way as to safeguard the interests of the people of Korea and the maintenance of peace and security in the Pacific, and that consideration of this question by the United Nations will contribute to these ends.

The free nations of Asia have given strong support to the United Nations and have worked for world peace. Commitment aggression in Korea increases the danger to the security and independence of these nations. We reaffirm our intention to continue to help them.

A host of the The pressure of communist expansion existed in Europe and undermined elsewhere long before the aggression against Korea, and necessary had measures were taken to meet it. The need to strengthen the forces of collective security has already been recognized of an immediate action for this purpose is under way. Clearly, decisions must be made and regarding the Far East must have their repercussions and effects.

In this connexion, we have kept in mind the urgency of building up the strength of the whole Free world. We are in complete agreement upon the need for immediate action by all the North Atlantic Treaty organization countries to intensify their efforts to build up their defence arrangements and to strengthen the Atlantic Community.

We are now ready to recognize that adequate defence forces are essential in order to prevent future wars from being fought with conventional arms.

Accordingly, we have reached the following conclusions:

1. Increased effort. The military capabilities of the United States and countries in the Atlantic Treaty organization should be increased as rapidly as possible.

2. Production of arms. The two countries should expand the production of arms which can be used by the forces of all the Free nations that are joined together in common defence. Together with the other nations the United States and the United Kingdom should continue to work out actual arrangements by which all these will contribute appropriately to the common defence.
We agreed that as soon as the plan now nearing completion in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for an effective integrated force for the defense of Europe is approved, a Supreme Commander should be appointed. It is our joint desire that this appointment shall be made soon.

In addition to these decisions on increasing our military strength, we have agreed that the maintenance of healthy civilian economies is of vital importance to the success of our defense efforts. We agreed that, while defense production must be given the highest practicable priority in the case of raw materials whose supply is inadequate, the essential civilian requirements of the free countries must be met as far as practicable. In order to obtain the necessary materials and to devote them as rapidly as possible to these priority purposes, we have agreed to work closely together for the purpose of increasing supplies of raw materials. We have recognized the necessity of international action to assure that these raw materials are distributed equitably in accordance with defense and civilian needs. We discussed certain immediate problems of raw materials shortages and consideration of these specific matters will continue. We are fully conscious of the increasing necessity of preventing materials and items of strategic importance from flowing into the hands of those who might use them against the free world.

In the circumstances which confront us throughout the world our nations have no other choice but to devote themselves with all vigor to the building up of our defense forces. We shall do this purely as a defensive measure. We believe that the communist leaders of the Soviet Union and China could, if they chose, modify their conduct in such a way as to make these defense preparations unnecessary. We shall do everything that we can, through whatever channels are open to us, to impress this view upon them and to seek a peaceful solution of existing issues.
The President stated that it was his hope that world conditions would never call for the use of the atomic bomb. The President told the Prime Minister that it was also his desire to keep the Prime Minister at all times informed of developments which might bring about a change in the situation.

In this critical period, it is a source of satisfaction to us that the views of our governments on basic problems are so similar. To believe that this identity of aim will enable our governments to carry out their determination to work together to strengthen the unity which has already been achieved among the free nations and to defend those values which are of fundamental importance to the people we represent, is of great moment, because the unity of our task and the magnitude of the task on hand imposed on us.

We believe that our relations with one another should be guided by the principles on which our nations are based and by the unifying force of our free and democratic way of life. We believe, therefore, that there should be an understanding between our governments on a number of essential issues with the aim of strengthening the bonds of our common hope and purpose.

To this end, we shall continue to work closely with each other in order to achieve our common goals, which include the maintenance of peace and security, the promotion of economic cooperation, and the advancement of cultural and educational exchanges.

We believe that the strength of our friendship lies in our mutual respect and understanding. Together, we can make the world a safer place for all.
